GENEALOGY

OF A

BRANCH OF THE DESCENDANTS

WOLSTON BROCKWAY,

WHO SETTLED IN LYME, CONN.,

ABOUT 1660.

COMPILED BY

BEMAN BROCKWAY

INTRODUCTION.

Several years ago it occurred to me that I would try to get together such data as I could, with a view of preparing a genealogy of the particular family of Brockways to which I belong. I knew that my grandfather, Isaiah Brockway, was born in Lyme, Conn., that he removed to East Granville, in that state, and afterwards to Southampton, Mass., where I was born and resided until I was fifteen years old, when I went into a printing office, and learned to set type and to do press work.

And that was about the extent of my information in regard to the Breckways.

Four years ago, in writing to a namesake in New York, Doct A. N. Brockway, I learned that he had given some attention to ancestral matters, and meeting him subsequently, we concluded that though we were not very nearly related, our great-great grandfathers were brothers, and that we would act in concert in seeing what could be done in the way of getting up a genealogy of the Brockways in this country. During the past four years we have devoted a great deal of time to investigation, written hundreds if not thousands of letters, and collected a mass of facts that would fill a good sized volume. The greatest share of this work has been performed by Mrs. A. N. Brockway, who has visited Lyme and other places in that vicinity repeatedly, and collected a vast amount of material concerning the descendants of Wolston Brockway that may some day be utilized and employed in the compilation of a genealogy that will be in some measure satisfactory at least to those engaged in its preparation. I accompanied Mrs. Brockway to Lyme myself, and we spent two full days in examining the records of that ancient town, and ascertained from them the important fact (at least I regarded it as important) that my great-grandfather was the son of William Brockway, 2d, who was the grandson of the first Wolston; for we found a deed from William, 2d, to "my son Gideon" of a piece of real estate in Lyme. So the chain connecting my family with that of the first settler in Connecticut bearing the Brockway name is unbroken.

It has been the intention of both Doct Brockway and myself to publish the facts collected in genealogical form, and we (or some one else) may do it hereafter. At present they are in too chaotic a condition to justify publication. The work would not be satisfactory to us, nor to any one else. Some very excellent records have been kept and furnished us, and it would gratify us if they could be put in print; but as a rule they do not reach back more than a generation or two, and when efforts have been made to make connection with the Lyme settler, some link in the chain has been wanting.

The Brockways, as a race, it appears to me, have had an unusual amount of independence in their composition. They have not appeared to greatly care about their ancestry, and have often known little of blood relations. The Brockways with whom we have corresponded have usually favored us with the names of their parents; but it has often happened that they could not go back of them, while they could tell us little or nothing of their brothers and sisters. Of course I can not say that this indifference to the ties of consanguinity is peculiar to people bearing my name, but the fact has been a matter of amazement to me, and it has been a serious drawback in the preparation of anything like a complete genealogy. I know that there is not much family pride among the American people; few of them care for coats of arms, or to know from whom they have descended, considering that they are to be estimated by the record they may themselves make, rather than by the one made by some ancestor, however excellent it may be. But the time has arrived when it would seem as if most people should feel sufficient interest in the family to which they belong to see that a fair record is kept of the births, deaths, marriages, &c., occurring therein. In the past, however, this duty has been sadly neglected among the Brockways. Perhaps the Joneses, Smiths and others have or have not done better; all I can say is, I have not gone in pursuit of their family record to see how well they were kept by them.

One gentleman named Brockway, who is the manager of a bank in a western State, wrote me that he had now and then met with persons of his name, but they were not very plenty. When he has undertaken to get up a genealogy of the Brockways, if at all industrious, he will be likely to modify his opinion. I have found them in nearly every State of the Union, and in almost every county in this State. So they are not deficient in numbers, whatever else they may lack.

I set out collecting materials for a genealogy under the impression that the Brockways in this country all started from Wolston in the town of Lyme. I have found this idea erroneous. I met a Brockway in New York who was born in England and who had resided in this country only six years; another whose father was a full blooded Scotchman and was never outside his native land until he settled in the Empire State; and there is a man of the name residing in Holyoke, Mass., who was born in Dublin! Hence, I have arrived at the conclusion that there are Brockways in the United States whose ancestors were not of Lyme origin. Nevertheless, it is true that most of the Brockways who are found in various parts of the New England States, as well as in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, are without doubt descendants from Wolston Brockway of Lyme, while those who have settled in Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin and other western States, have generally gone from this State.

I should very much like to publish the records of the descendants of Ephraim Brockway, who removed from Lyme to East Washington, N. H., in the latter part of the last century, and from whom has descended the Rev. Wm. H. Brockway, once a State Senator in Michigan; as well as the Rev. Albert A., for a year or two a preacher at Clayton, in this county; of Jonathan Brockway, who went to New Hampshire from Connecticut, in 1760, and has numerous representatives, not only in that State.

but in all parts of the country, as well as of many others; but of course I can not do it in this publication. My present purpose is simply to make a commencement. I start with my greatgrandfather, and have given the records of his descendants as far as I have been able to obtain them. They are a great deal more imperfect than they should be. I know that most of his children came to this State; two stopped at Catskill; one settled at or near Geddes, in Onondaga County, where he kept a hotel which was somewhat noted throughout Central New York; one, I think, went farther west, at least his son, Hiel, is found at Brockport at an early day. He was an enterprising citizen, with a great amount of push. The village derived its name from him, so I take it he was there when it came into being. He was a noted canal man, and owned a line of packets between Rochester and Buffalo. I have obtained and am able to give a record of his children, but not of his grandchildren. I have the impression that his sons were to a great extent failures, while his daughters were superior women. At any rate two of them married members of Congress. I have met these ladies, and they justify the remark I have made above.

My grandfather settled in Southampton, as already stated. He had a sister who went to Erie, Penn., and married Sheldon Ball. Her son, Gideon Johnston Ball, was at one time Third Auditor of the Post-office Department, and came within one vote of being nominated for governor of the Keystone State. He was a man of considerable ability, but took so little interest in his family connections as to be unable to tell me anything about them.

The Brockways with whom I have come in contact have generally been men who have had opinions of their own and were not afraid to express them. I should say they were somewhat noted for their individuality. A good many of them have been strongly inclined to look out for themselves, while extending to others the same privilege. I do not mean that they are exceedingly selfish; rather, that they are disposed to mind their own business without troubling themselves about the concerns of others. While some have amassed considerable fortunes as bankers and speculators, the large majority have been tillers of the soil and are therefore in moderate circumstances. But there are few poor men of the name so far as I know. Most of them try to take care of themselves and to meet their obligations when due.

My grandfather was a farmer and something of a stone mason, I believe. Whether he was ever sufficiently advanced in the trade to lay brick I do not know. My father was a farmer and his brother a farmer and blacksmith; that is, he worked at blacksmithing rainy days and when he could not work out doors. My brother is a farmer: not a first-class one, I am sorry to say, but he obtains a good living from his farm, is a hard worker and a man of unquestioned integrity. All the Brockways I know anything about are industrious; so there are few of the shiftless sort among them. Whatever failings they have, and they unquestionably have the usual number—they are not lazy and indolent. There is a good deal of energy and push about them, some respectability, but not much aristocracy. As a people they are rather moral; some are very religious; there have been and are several clergymen, some of them somewhat distinguished, who have borne our name; while there are others who have their own religious notions, and do not concern themselves whether they square with those of other people or not.

Of course I am publishing this on my own responsibility and at my own expense. It is not unlikely that Doct A. N. Brockway will publish a genealogy of his family, which I believe is much fuller than the one I am putting to press, in somewhat similar style. Others may follow in the pathway in which we have acted as pioneers. An immense quantity of material has been collected; much more might be obtained if those interested would exert themselves as we have done. The time will probably come when some one will undertake to complete the work we have commenced; but whoever embarks in the business will needs have a large stock of patience and perseverance; and to put it in print will require considerable money. How can it be raised? Who will pay the expense?

B. BROCKWAY.

WOLSTON BROCKWAY.

The earliest known mention of this doubtless first representative of this family name in America, and the ancestral head of all bearing it here prior to 1800, is found in the Town Records of Lyme, Ct., where it is stated, that Dec. 3, 1659, he bought "housing and land of John Reynolds of Norwich, formerly of Lyme, on the East side of the river, over against the town of Saybrook." No prior notice of him has yet been found in either Lyme, Saybrook, or the Hartford State Records. The earliest Saybrook town and church records have been missing for more than two centuries, having, probably, been destroyed by fire, which occurred in the fort and its adjacent buildings at that era. parison of dates, it is seen that he came to Lyme in his twentyfirst year and was married soon after. Some twenty years later, he became the possessor of a considerable tract of land in the Northwestern part of Lyme, on the Connecticut river, and located his family residence there.

The "deed of sale" from Reynolds to Brockway specifies "his land, upland and meadow, all that was granted him (Reyholds) by the town of Saybrook for £20." In a sale from that property in 1680, he is named as "Wolston B., Planter," and also "Cooper of Black Hall." In 1682 he sold out to Christopher Chredophus of New London for £100, "all of my land purchased of John Reynolds, in the neck of land commonly called Black Point, twenty acres of upland and three and one-half of meadow." In 1687 it was "voted that Goodman Brockway shall have the remainder of his 4th division, in some convenient place between Joshuasland and Fishing Brook, if it be there to be found." In 1682 he was one of the "stewards" with Reynold Marvin, and on the list of proprietors of the town of Lyme, and in 1704, was chosen sheep-master, and was then located "at the third hill to the Westward of Flatrock hill, and his division to the Eastward of the great plain at Tantum Morantum. In 1698 he "was granted by the town the remainder of his proportion," viz: "the neck of land against the lower corner of Twelve Mile Island," and "at the upper end of the meadow, at the fishing brook, up to the landing place, near his house," showing that he then lived in that part of the town. In 1697 was a deed of gift from Wolston B. to his son Wolston of land, "commonly known as the Planting Field, where my said son hath erected himself a dwelling house," near the lot of his own son William. he bought of Rev. Moses Noyes, forty acres of plough land, and also received from the town two hundred acres at Tantum Morantum. In 1697 he devised land to his eldest son William, "according to God's command to provide for my children," and also in 1709 devised property to the same son, in consideration of a legacy bequeathed by his "kinsman, Mr. (Gregory) Wilterton The particular connection between the two of Hartford." families is not known. Mr. Wilterton, as we learn from the Rev. Dr. Walker's recent "History of the First Church of Hartford," was one of its original members. His tombstone and that of his wife, are among the oldest in the ancient cemetery in that city.

In a deed of 1702, he gave his son Wolston certain property, "feeling that he was growing old," and in return, Wolston, Jr., promises to provide for his father, but died in 1707 before his father. He also deeded land to "son Richard" and to "son John;" also to the latter "two iron pots and one brass skillet," on Sept. 5, 1716. The record of his children's births was sent to the town clerk Jan. 20, 1683, and it contains no mention of this son John, who is, however, often mentioned in the record of deeds. Wolston also gives Richard the homestead in Lyme, to care for him and his wife. The latest paper signed by him is dated Aug. 1, 1718, he being then about eighty years of age.

Wolston Brockway, Sr., married in Lyme, Hannah Bridges, of that town, daughter of William Bridges, and the number of children recorded was ten. "Goodwife Brockway" died Feb. 6, 1687. Where she was buried is not known. He, without doubt, died at his son William's house in Joshuatown, near Brockway's Ferry, and was laterred in the first burying ground of the family on the hillside in the rear of Mr. Z. B. Warner's home, but no decipherable stone marks the spot. Many of the next generation were buried there, and the stones are still standing and to be read. Of the sons, William, the eldest, succeeded to his father's homestead, and his descendants are still living on the Brockway property. Wolston, Jr., died early, and his son, Wolston, third, also died young, as in the will of Wolston second, Samuel is mentioned as the eldest son. The other sons were scattered. settling along the shore of the Sound, and thus being separated from the elder branch, their descendants have been thought to be a separate family. Richard married and some of his children remained on the old land, but cannot be traced after the record of birth of children of the 4th generation. These children lived in stirring times, and while many entered the army and died for their country, the spirit of unrest engendered by war, and the promise of land at the west, wide enough for homes for all, prompted many to leave the old and tried for new homes in the wilderness, and they took their all and journeyed to Ohio, Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania and Canada, and in the struggle for wife and little ones, no time was found for recording the advent of new members of the family, or the departure of the aged.

There seems to be a doubt about the number of William's children, as there was no record of their births. The Pratt Genealogy gives Sarah and William, and adds "perhaps others." In Lyme Records is recorded a deed in which Wm. Brockway conveys land in Joshuatown to his son Gideon, dated April 2d, 1756, a deed given by Edward B. to William B., Jr., is witnessed by Thomas B., who may have been another son.
